

Deceit

The Sneaky Fox

The Sneaky Fox

A fox with eyes like amber stones, could spin a lie in honeyed tones.
He'd promise berries, sweet and red,
then lead you to a thorn instead.

The Sneaky Fox

"Trust me!" he'd grin with gleaming teeth, while hiding sneaky plans beneath.
He tricked the hens out of their eggs,
he robbed the bees, he stole the kegs.

The Sneaky Fox

But lies, like shadows, grow and spread,
until they tangle 'round your head.

No creature trusted fox at all,
they'd flee his den, they'd dodge his call.

The Sneaky Fox

Alone he sat, his cunning spent, with no one left where'er he went.
The fox who fooled the whole wood through had no one left to listen to.

The Sneaky Fox

Moral

A lie may help you win the day, but chases all your friends away.
